Digestion

Why is good digestion important?

Nelson is an Elder who has an on-going issue with hard stool and constipation. He decides to make an appointment with his provider to talk about his constipation and overall health. Nelson's provider referred him to a dietitian for nutrition education on ways to treat constipation and prevent this issue in the future. He learned about increasing fiber and fluids in his diet and worked on this for several weeks. On his follow up appointment, Nelson was happy to report he is feeling better and having more frequent, soft stool now.

What are some considerations for digestion?

- Hard stool
- Long time in between bowel movements
- Acid reflux or heart burn
- Feeling bloated
- Upset stomach

Your digestive system works hard every day to digest the food you eat. After years of this, you may start to see some changes in your digestive health.

Questions to ask yourself:

- Are you having hard stool?
- Is there a long time in between bowel movements?
- Are you struggling with acid reflux or heart burn?
- Are you taking multiple medications which may affect your digestive tract?
