Teeth and Mouth Health

Why is teeth and mouth health important?

Martha eats healthy to help control her diabetes. Her diet consists of a lot of fruits and vegetables like apples and carrots. Recently, Martha has been feeling pain when she chews, making it hard for her to eat healthy foods. Martha made an appointment at the dental clinic and learned she has gum disease causing some teeth to be loose. After she had the teeth taken out, she was able to eat comfortably again and resume her healthy diet. Oral health is important to your overall wellness, physically and emotionally.

What are some considerations for teeth and mouth health?

- Changes in the way your gums look and feel, especially watching for red or white sores
- Lumps or bumps in or around the mouth

Connections have been found between how well your body works and how clean your mouth is. You need a healthy mouth to maintain good nutrition, and healthy teeth boosts self-esteem and happiness. Luckily, most conditions in the mouth are preventable.

Questions to ask yourself:

- When was the last time you had your teeth checked?
- Does your mouth hurt?
- Can you eat healthy foods comfortably?
